role of the individual. To understand the thinking of John Galt, the heroic force of the novel, one must understand how he explains the problem: "You are the rulers; you did not make us," John Galt said. "We are here to realize our function. It is our function to control you. Because of this, we are unchangeable, eternal, inevitable. You can kill us, enslave us, destroy us, but you cannot alter our purpose, because we are the essential purpose. You are the way out. You are the way out, because you cannot
